MACDONOUGH MEMORIAL.

At a meeting of the Macdonough commission of Vermont held at the Stevens house in Vergennes, there were present Rev. L. A. Vezina, John H. Donnelly, Millard F. Barnes of the commission, together with Major M. J. Macdonough and Major James F. Bell, of the corps of engineers, United States army.

The engineer officers submitted to the members of the commission the preliminary design prepared by the designing and constructing architect, John Russell Pope of New York, for the memorial to be constructed at Vergennes, to commemorate the building at Vergennes of the Macdonough fleet which defeated the British in the battle of Lake Champlain at Plattsburg, September 14, 1812.

The commission concurred with the engineer officers in accepting the design of Mr. Pope, who will proceed to execute the commission. The memorial will be of granite and will stand 25 feet high and will be 28 by 32 feet at the base. It is expected it will be completed sometime before the latter part of December, 1916.
